

James L. Dorman

Jim began his career with Arthur Andersen & Co in Chicago. His clients included companies in banking, finance, advertising, mining and manufacturing. He also specialized in mergers, acquisitions, and troubled companies.

He left public accounting to become the CFO of one of the world's largest advertising agencies. Later he became the president of a troubled NYC public company and transformed its focus from real estate development and mortgage banking to manufacturing. Later, Jim became the president of four other public companies in financial trouble. He has also owned or had active investments in 12 other companies. He currently owns a composite manufacturing company.

His international experience involved ownership and board membership in companies that had operations in China, Mexico, England, Ireland, Holland, France, Australia, New Zealand, and Taiwan.

Jim has held board positions on many private and public companies in banking, insurance, leasing, and manufacturing.

Jim currently serves on the board of eight companies and is a trustee (emeritus) of The Milwaukee School of Engineering. Jim has a BS Degree from Idaho State University and an MBA from the University of Denver; he is a CPA and a member of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants. He is also a member of WPO (World Presidents Organization), Rotary International and the Milwaukee FBI Citizens Academy Alumni Association.
